

Guideline for Submitting Editorials

For our Journal readers, we could consider the following issues as appropriate editorial manuscript.

- Overview of the Latest Medical Advances and Research: Providing insights into new treatment modalities, diagnostic methods, technological advancements, and other cutting-edge developments that are of interest to readers.
- Future of Medical Education and Career: Examining innovations in medical education, highlighting emerging research directions, discussing support mechanisms for young researchers and medical students, and addressing career development in the field of medicine.
- Discussion on Improving Healthcare Quality and Safety: Addressing initiatives aimed at enhancing healthcare quality, preventing medical errors, ensuring patient safety, and discussing areas for improvement.
- Ethical and Legal Issues in Healthcare: Exploring recent trends and debates in medical ethics and law, discussing ethical dilemmas faced among healthcare professionals, and presenting perspectives on bioethical issues.
- Healthcare Policy and Economic Aspects: Analyzing changes in healthcare policy, discussing economic aspects of healthcare systems, exploring cost-reduction strategies, and initiatives to improve access to healthcare.

These themes are pertinent for editorial content in medical journals as they provide valuable insights and discussions relevant to the medical community and healthcare practitioners.

And editorials should consist of the following paragraphs:

- (1) Where we are now: Current state of the problem:
- (2) Where we should go: Direction to aim
- (3) How to get there: Methods for resolution
